Directory of Energy Information Products and Services

Energy information products and services (EIS) can be divided into two categories: those based on interval meter data typically recorded by the utility revenue meter or a secondary meter, and those based on data taken from the utility bill. Some companies provide both types of services, and may also provide bill payment and accounting services for business consumers.

The Feature Comparison tools above provide a side-by-side listing of energy information offerings in spreadsheet format to help you compare their capabilities. When you use these tools on-screen, the column and row headings are fixed, allowing you to scroll across or scroll down to view more data. When you print these spreadsheets out, the column and row headings will repeat on every page to help you find vendors or EIS tools that meet your criteria.

The Catalogs provide profiles of products and explain each vendor's offering, with companies listed alphabetically. These documents also provide historical references for energy information offerings that have been pulled from the marketplace due to mergers, acquisitions, or business failures. The catalogs are large documents saved in PDF. Use the Table of Contents, Index (at the end), and the Adobe Find feature to locate companies or offerings of interest.
